Suit: Take your T customer appreciation day and shove it

MBTA. A class-action lawsuit was launched against MBTA, Keolis.

A class-action lawsuit against the MBTA and Keolis Commuter Services says that a monthly discount and a day of free rides does not make up for terrible customer service throughout the winter.

The suit, filed by Boston-based Robert Richardson, says the T's customer appreciation gestures are empty and fall "well short of fair compensation" for the cancellations, delays, changing schedules, ineffective alerts and complete indifference by the MBTA toward its customers.

The chief problem, according to the suit, was not the weather, but years of mismanagement and indifference.

The suit says the T and Keolis — the commuter rail operator — breached the contracts they made with the plaintiffs who purchased a commuter rail monthly pass by failing to offer timely and reliable commuter rail service this winter.

The suit seeks "monetary relief in an amount to be determined at trial, together with pre-judgment and post-judgment interest at the maximum rate allowed."

An MBTA spokesman told Boston.com that the T has yet to see the complaint.

Harvard China Forum 'defines the dream'

The Harvard China Forum, the largest student-run conference in America, held its welcoming ceremony Saturday at Harvard Memorial Church in Cambridge.

The event welcomed a wide range of speakers, including representatives from business, academia, media and entertainment. This year's theme centered around "Defining The Chinese Dream."

"We love the enthusiasm that we get and the feedback that we get every year," said Sabrina Castenfelt, president of the Harvard China Forum. "We sell out always too quickly."

Castenfelt added: "We always wish we can just increase the number of places that we have available here specifically to serve anyone interested in coming."

Speakers included Harvard Business School Professor F. Warren McFarlan, iKang Healthcare Chairman Zhang Ligang, Ross Perot Jr., the son of 1992 presidential candidate Ross Perot, Hillhouse Capital Chairman Zhang Lei and JD.com CEO Richard Liu.

The primary topics covered revolved around the progress China has made — McFarlan had much to say on the topic — as well as the challenges ahead. Speakers also addressed the divide between China and the U.S., censorship, cybercrime, the medical sector and the environment.

An example of this is using technology to streamline how goods flow through China.

Local comedian sues WBZ, TV 38 over alleged breach of contract

Local comedian Rob Potylo — best known for his alter ego Robby Roadsteamer — is suing the local CBS affiliate over a scuttled television series of his.

Last year, Potylo, who is listed as manager, along with Erik Angra, of Quiet Desperation LLC, the plaintiff in this case, met with local representatives from WBZ-TV and WSBK (TV 38) about developing a television show.

Potylo, through the suit, alleges the two sides reached an agreement wherein the internet series "Quiet Desperation" would be developed for TV and broadcast on those two stations.

Potylo alleges a CBS-affiliated sales executive backed out of the agreement, citing the "drug content" featured in some of the Quiet Desperation skits that were published online.

That, according to the lawsuit, which was filed in Essex Superior Court, was a breach of contract. Potylo is seeking triple damages, in addition to attorneys' fees, interest and cost.

Messages left with CBS and WBZ were not immediately returned Sunday.

Damage

Counting the reconstruction costs

Rajiv Biswas, Asia Pacific chief economist at business research firm IHS, said long-term reconstruction costs in Nepal using proper building standards for an earthquake zone could be more than $5 billion, or around 20 percent of the country's GDP.

"With housing construction standards in Nepal being extremely low ... the impact of the earthquake has been devastating based on initial reports," he said in an early analysis of the likely damage.

In crowded Kathmandu, many buildings were flattened or badly damaged.

Nepali army officer Santosh Nepal and a group of rescuers worked all night on Saturday to open a passage into a collapsed building in Kathmandu. They used pick axes because bulldozers could not get through the ancient city's narrow streets.

"We believe there are still people trapped inside," he told Reuters, pointing at concrete debris and twisted reinforcement rods where a three-story residential building once stood.

Fatalities. The death toll is likely to climb as rescue workers struggle to reach remote regions.

Thousands of desperate Nepalese spent a second night in the open in the early hours of Monday, unable to return to homes either flattened by Saturday's devastating earthquake or at risk of collapsing in a series of powerful aftershocks.

Across the capital, Kathmandu, and beyond, exhausted families lay mattresses out on streets and erected tents to shelter themselves from rain. The sick and wounded also lay out in the open, unable to find beds in the city's overwhelmed hospitals.

Outside Kathmandu Medical College, surgeons set up an operating theater inside a tent.

People queued for water dispensed from the back of trucks, while the few stores still open had next to nothing on their shelves. Crowds jostled at one pharmacy to snap up medicine.

High in the Himalayas, hundreds of foreign and Nepalese climbers remained trapped after a huge avalanche killed 17 people in the worst single disaster to hit Mount Everest.

Nearly 2,500 people were confirmed killed in the 7.9-magnitude quake, making it the worst such disaster to hit Nepal since 1934 when 8,500 died. Thousands more were injured.

Several countries rushed to send aid and personnel.

India flew in medical supplies and members of its National Disaster Response Force. China sent a 60-strong emergency team. Pakistan's army said it was sending four C-130 aircraft with a 30-bed hospital, search and rescue teams and relief supplies.

Britain, which believes several hundred of its nationals are in Nepal, said it was delivering supplies, medics and search and rescue teams.

But there has been little sign of international assistance on the ground so far, with some aid flights prevented from landing by aftershocks that closed Kathmandu's main airport several times on Sunday.

With so many people sleeping in the open with no power or water and downpours forecast, fears mounted of major food and water shortages. Across the country, hundreds of villages have been left to fend for themselves.

US mulls ransom policy for hostages: ABC

The Obama administration is considering changing a U.S. policy prohibiting families of hostages held overseas from making ransom payments to abductors, according to a television report on Sunday.

"Under recommendations contained in an ongoing White House review of U.S. hostage policy, there will be absolutely zero chance ... of any family member of an American-held hostage overseas ever facing jail themselves, or even the threat of prosecution, for trying to free their loved ones," according to the report aired on ABC's "This Week."

The report said three senior U.S. officials told of the policy review, but it did not indicate when a decision might be made.

Okla. lethal injection drug faces Supreme Court test

The U.S. Supreme Court is set to hear arguments this week on whether a drug used in Oklahoma's lethal injection mix should be banned in a case that comes as a shortage of execution chemicals has sent some states scrambling for alternatives.

The main question before the nine justices in the case brought by three death row inmates that will be heard on Wednesday is whether the use of the sedative midazolam violates constitutional protections against cruel and unusual punishment. REUTERS

Oversight. McCain urges shift of drone program from CIA to the Pentagon

Drone strikes against suspected enemy combatants on foreign soil should be run by the U.S. military and not the CIA, Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John McCain said on Sunday.

McCain made his remarks on CNN's "State of the Union" broadcast just days after it was disclosed that a drone strike in Pakistan in January mistakenly killed two Western hostages: an American and an Italian.

The Republican senator and 2008 failed presidential candidate predicted the incident will renew a debate within the Obama administration on how the drone program is run.

However, there still appeared to be strong support in Congress for employing the unmanned drones against enemy targets, which has expanded during the Obama administration. Critics have long complained about civilians being killed in the air strikes.

McCain acknowledged "some bias" on which federal agency should operate the drone program, given that shifting it to the Pentagon from the CIA would put it under his purview as chairman of the Senate committee overseeing the military.

Nevertheless, McCain said the Pentagon had the expertise and, "I think it should be conducted and oversight and administered by the Department of Defense."

The United States was targeting an al Qaeda compound in Pakistan when a drone strike killed American hostage Warren Weinstein, who had been held since 2011, and Italian hostage Giovanni Lo Porto, as well as an al Qaeda leader who also was an American.

"I think it was probably preventable, in that there was an obvious breakdown in intelligence. They didn't know that they were there."

Guess who's (almost) 40! / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

1 You didn't get your invite to David Beckham's birthday yet?

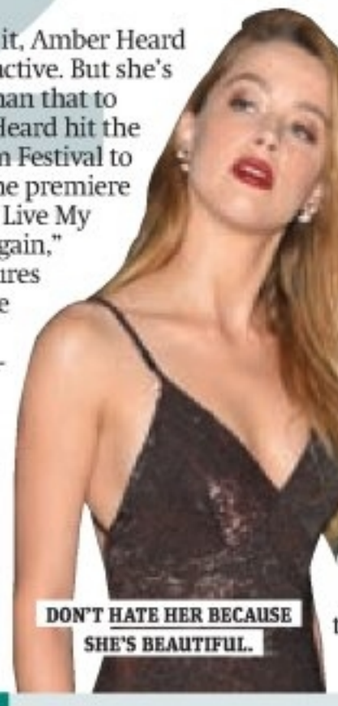
David Beckham is turning 40 — yes, 40 — this coming Saturday, and the celebrate that milestone, he's reportedly planning a massive, lavish, weekend-long bash at his favorite five-star Moroccan resort, according to the Sun. Oh, and he's flying a bunch of famous friends in for the occasion, though they haven't been given the exact location yet. On the private jet flight plan for the event? Tom Cruise, Guy Ritchie and Gordon Ramsay, plus Liv Tyler and boyfriend Dave Gardner. "He'll only turn 40 once, so he wants to do it in style. Morocco is a place close to his heart," a source says. There's still a few days to go, though, in case — like me — you're wondering why your invitation hasn't turned up yet. A simple oversight, I'm sure.

4 Stephen Hawking weighs in on Zayn Malik, One Direction

GUESS WHO'S SECRETLY A DIRECTIONER.

If you had the chance to ask Stephen Hawking just one question, obviously it would be about One Direction, right? The famed physicist appeared — via 3-D hologram, because he's awesome — at the Sydney Opera House to take a few questions, and one of those? "What do you think is the cosmological effect of Zayn Malik leaving One Direction and consequently breaking the hearts of millions of teenage girls across the world?" Before you go getting embarrassed on humanity's behalf, know that Hawking was delighted. "My advice to any heartbroken young girl is to pay close attention to the study of theoretical physics," he said. "It would not be beyond the realms of possibility that somewhere outside of our own universe lies another, different universe [in which] Zayn is still in One Direction." I think we found a way to get kids interested in science again.

3 Amber Heard tired of being judged by her sexiness



DON'T HATE HER BECAUSE SHE'S BEAUTIFUL.

Yes, we get it, Amber Heard is very attractive. But she's got more than that to offer, OK? Heard hit the Tribeca Film Festival to celebrate the premiere of "When I Live My Life Over Again," which features her in a role that's not over-sexualized. "I've been in this business for 12 years or something, and it's incredibly frustrating to be able to just now be trusted or given roles like this because this industry's very hard on women. You're constantly asked to choose between one of two archetypes: sexy or not," she tells Indiewire. "The really f—ed up thing is that nobody has any incentive in this industry to invest in something other than ... what's the easiest thing to do."

2 Blake Lively breast-feeds during interview

Sometimes you don't have to ask a new mother about the whole work-life balance thing, because she's a living, breathing illustration of just that. Like when Blake Lively recently sat for an interview with the L.A. Times while breast-feeding her newborn daughter, James. "I am asked not to describe what the baby looks like — but how do you really describe an infant anyway, other than cute?" the Times' Amy Kaufman writes. 'Thanks for that,' she says. 'Please don't describe my areolas, either.'"

The five stages of Marvel movie-watching

This Friday marks the much-anticipated release of "Avengers: Age of Ultron" — unless you're in Europe, that is, where it came out last week — and now that we're losing track of the number of films in the Marvel cinematic universe, it's fair to say watching them is a particularly unique experience. To wit, YouTuber Leigh Lahav teams up with the wisecracking animators at How It Should Have Ended for this look at the various emotions fans go through in the run-up to yet another Marvel movie-splosion. I kind of have to go with the annoyed bystander in this one: "I'm only here for Chris Evans."

Has Sansa developed the political skills she needs to survive? / HELEN SLOAN, HBO

After a pair of episodes mostly concerned with setup, the third episode of Season 5, "High Sparrow," began to make good on the promise that characters long separated by distance would finally meet. The producers have packed the show full of gunpowder; all they need is a match.

Episode MVPs

Sansa Stark was always a tragic figure. She fell for Joffrey Baratheon because he was cute and courteous. By the time she realized he was also a psychopath, he had already killed her dad and doomed her to live in what amounted to a very fancy prison cell.

Joffrey's dead, but in "High Sparrow," we learned that Sansa is to be married to the sadistic Ramsay Bolton, who might be even worse.

But Sansa has learned a lot in the meantime, and she's walking into this new danger prepared to give as good as she gets. When she politely curtsied to Roose Bolton, the man who stabbed her brother at his own wedding not two seasons ago, it was the opening volley in what promises to be a prolonged battle.

While Sansa embraced her new identity, her little sister Arya struggled to preserve her old one. Arya wants to join the Faceless Men, an elite league of assassins. To do that, she has to throw away her old possessions, but she couldn't bring herself to discard Needle, the sword Jon Snow gave her in the very first episode. No matter how much Sansa and Arya change, they'll always be Starks, and they're both getting ready to take revenge on those who have decimated their family.

Quoted

It's a pirate's life for 'GoT'

"Game of Thrones" has always been popular among pirates. Last year's finale was illegally downloaded 7.5 million times within a week after it aired.

That number was impressive, but it has nothing on the 13 million times the Season 5 premiere was downloaded. No matter what it does, HBO can't seem to keep its piracy problem in check.

Our watch for next week begins

Meanwhile, Tyrion Lannister was kidnapped by Jorah Mormont, who intends to bring the dwarf before Daenerys Targaryen in the hope that she'll rethink her exile of him from last year. The show has already done a great job of compressing Tyrion's meandering journey from the books, and pairing him with a mismatched character like Jorah should help the remaining time pass that much quicker.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

A new way to combat teen cyberbullying

One new program says reporting harassment needs to be more efficient.

MEGHAN POOLE
metronewyork
letters@metro.us

With the increased use of social media among teens, what used to be confined to schoolyard taunts has expanded to the Internet.

"There is a dark side to social media — if you post something that you think is funny, but it's very hurtful to someone else, then that can have a lasting effect that it's never had before," says Jeff Ervine, the president of Bridg-It, which aims to help schools find solutions to bullying.

The company's new online initiative, Bridg-It School, raises awareness of cyberbullying and provides resources to students and families.

Bridg-It strives to help schools identify and combat bullying issues. ISTOCK

We asked Ervine to share his ideas for reducing and resolving bullying in schools.

Report incidents efficiently

Even with the recent technological advances, Ervine, when researching schools, found that most school districts were still using paper to report bullying incidents. This explains, he says, why only about 10 percent of bullying incidents are actually reported.

"We designed Bridg-It to use technology for what it was meant for, which is speed and efficiency," Ervine says. "By using technology to gather all the data and manage all the paperwork, we can cut down on the time [to address incidents] upwards of 95 percent."

Educate everyone

Ervine says that one of the reasons he started Bridg-It was because there wasn't enough awareness of cyberbullying. He says cyberbullying often occurs outside of typical school hours. Because of this, in addition to not having the resources to fight it, many students don't know when and if they should report something that happens outside of school. "Everyone in the community has to have the ability to identify when someone's being bullied or defamed online," he says, "and Bridg-It allows for the parents, teachers, administrators and the students to identify anyone who's been bullied or harassed."

Resolve issues appropriately

Ervine believes the best way to resolve the problem after it is reported is by using what he calls "a restorative approach." Bridg-It School offers methods and steps to do that through an online resource center. "The idea was to create a smart resource center that gave everyone what he or she needed to be educated in a consistent manner," he says.

The resource center houses news articles, laws pertaining to bullying, tips for dealing with bullying and much more.

Three career tips for 20-somethings

Millennials are quickly making up a huge chunk of the workforce. (One recent study even estimates that by 2025, Gen Y-ers will account for 75 percent of U.S. workers.) Today, many millennials are still in entry-level roles, which makes now the perfect time to start strategizing future career growth.

"You've really got to be the CEO of your own career," says millennial workplace expert Lindsey Pollak.

How exactly do you do that? Pollak, the New York Times best-selling author of "Becoming the Boss," explains.

Ideally, you'll find a company that gives you room to grow. ISTOCK

Network, network, network

It may sound obvious, but the importance of networking cannot be overstated. This especially holds true for millennials — many of whom are opting for the freelance life as opposed to the traditional nine-to-five.

Pollak says becoming active in professional associations and alumni groups can open the door for establishing new contacts. Make it part of your routine to reach out to potential leads via a cold email or by way of any sort of loose connection. If your best friend's mother grew up with someone you'd love to connect with, don't be afraid to use that link.

"A coffee date is my favorite [way to connect] because it's quick and doesn't take a lot of time," says Pollak. "Offer to meet people near their office. Then write a very gracious follow-up thank you afterward."

Seek creative leadership roles

Millennials are a confident bunch. According to Pollak, most members of this generation are itching to move up the ladder — sometimes way faster than their companies are willing (or able) to promote them.

If you're currently employed with a company, Pollak advises getting as involved as you can. "It's no longer enough to just put your head down and do the work," she says. "You've also got to go to meetings, sign up for mentoring, join an internal network within your company and volunteer for projects and internal assignments." Marianne Hayes

Don't blow off the value of insurance

Freelancing certainly doesn't come with a cushy benefits package.

"Disability insurance will keep a paycheck coming in if you're not able to work because of an off-the-job injury or illness," she says. "But if, for example, your parents co-signed your student loans and something happens to you, your parents would still be responsible for them."

Investing in this peace of mind while you're young and healthy is something your future self will thank you for.

Find a balance at college to make life easier

It is possible to have a social life and stay on top of your studies.

MEGHAN POOLE
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

It's easy to be swept away by the amazing opportunities — and distractions — life as a college student has to offer. But failure to manage your time correctly can hurt your grades and make you both unhappy and overwhelmed.

We asked Stephanie Kaplan Lewis, the co-founder of the online community Her Campus and an author of "The Her Campus Guide to College Life," for her tips on how to stay ahead of the curve.

Don't be afraid to try things out

Getting involved on campus is a great way to make friends and build leadership skills. "You can kind of get your feet wet in an area to see if you like it before committing yourself to an internship," Kaplan Lewis points out.

Plan Ahead

While you don't necessarily have to hand in your homework in college the way you did in high school, it's still important to keep up. "Even though maybe no one would know if you didn't do it, it's important to stay on top of it yourself," she says. Staying on top of your work throughout the semester also means that you won't have to cram during finals. "[All-nighters] are really just not the most effective way to retain information," she explains.

Don't multitask

It may seem like there are never enough hours in a day, but you are really best off doing one thing at a time. "Don't be reading a textbook, watching 'Scandal' and talking to friends in your room at the same time," she says. "You're just wasting a lot of time and not getting anything done."

Get a study buddy

"Find someone in your class that you enjoy spending time with outside of class and also who seems like-minded to you in terms of homework," she says. Having someone that can keep you honest and accountable in terms of deadlines can be a lifesaver as far as studying goes. Kaplan Lewis also recommends you and your study partner work together to create study guides before major exams.

Ask for help

"Most professors offer office hours where you can go with questions if you don't understand the material or just want to learn more about it," she says. Schools also typically offer tutoring, which you should look into. Utilizing all the resources at your school will make you feel more engaged and more productive.

The secret weapon of successful career women

Three powerful women share why, in order to do it all, sometimes you have to do nothing.

EMILY LAURENCE

How to do TM: Find a teacher at Tm.org who will help you craft your mantra. Focus on your mantra for 20 minutes, twice a day. ISTOCK

This isn't an article about leaning in or speaking up. It turns out that the No. 1 career tip many successful women practice is just taking the time to chill out. Women are three times more likely to have an anxiety disorder than men, according to Stress.org. Not only does stress greatly negatively affect one's health, it also affects one's productivity. That's why more and more people are turning toward transcendental meditation, resting your attention on a short mantra that helps you find your "inner silence."

"There's a hypothesis that deep in your mind is a place that is still," says Bob Roth, the executive director of the David Lynch Foundation, a nonprofit that teaches transcendental meditation to lower-income people and at-risk youth.

Three very successful career women recently shared how transcendental meditation has changed their lives at a recent David Lynch Foundation fundraiser. We share the highlights here.

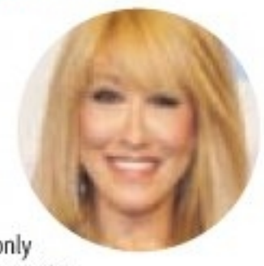
Arianna Huffington

Huffington Post Media president and editor-in-chief

In 2007, Arianna Huffington collapsed in her office from exhaustion and woke up in a pool of blood. That was the wake-up call she needed. Now she practices transcendental meditation daily, and ironically, the busier she is, the more she meditates.

"The busier we are, the more we need to connect to our inner wisdom and power," she says, stressing that taking time out to meditate will make you a better worker. "You know exactly how much battery your smartphone has at all times, and if it gets below 13 percent, you freak out and look for a charging shrine. But what about yourself?"

Dr. Suzanne Steinbaum



Lenox Hill Hospital heart specialist and host of "Focus on Health"

As a cardiovascular doctor, Dr. Suzanne Steinbaum sees firsthand how transcendental meditation has life-changing effects on health. "This is the only type of meditation clinically shown to reduce blood pressure and has substantially reduced rates of heart attacks, strokes and death," she tells us. "Stress is a medical issue. It affects your arteries, cortisol levels, and it slows your heart down. Transcendental meditation gets to the root of the problem."

Robin Roberts

"Good Morning America" news anchor

Robin Roberts was introduced to transcendental meditation through her colleague, television journalist George Stephanopoulos: "I saw how calm he was — even during chaotic moments — and I was like, 'What do you have? I want some of that!'" She says it has been especially helpful to her as she has overcome breast cancer. "Meditation won't prevent things from coming your way, but it will help you in the recovery process," she says.

Letters to the editor

It's not just about workers

Re: 'Workers do deserve pay' (Metro, April 23) Letter writer D. Brown does have a point where he states "people deserve the pay they can force their employers to pay." While the word "deserve" is definitely arguable, Brown obviously never owned, operated, or managed a business. Pay is based on various factors such as skills, education, efficiency, margins, productivity, and most important return on investment. Fast-food workers are paid what they are paid because of low margins, low skill and education requirements, and overall abundance. Thinking that you can disrupt the business to extort a better pay is totally nonsense. You'll be fired and easily replaced. And comparing them to pro athletes and movie stars is even more absurd. They get paid what they do because their employers get a return on investment. Brad Pitt wouldn't earn $20 million a movie if his employer didn't earn it back and more via ticket sales, pay per views, rentals, etc. LeBron James would be working the take-out window if his performance didn't draw attendance, TV views, merchandise sales, etc.

NIKO CHAN, VIA EMAIL

Good pay part of good society

I understand that it's not personal that fast-food workers and others get such low wages. However, they don't make enough to live on. Why do multi-billion-dollar companies like McDonalds and Walmart make billions and pay lousy wages? Why do CEO's make hundreds of times the salary of workers? These are human beings. Everyone deserves a living wage. I don't care about impersonal economic forces. I care about people. We are not machines or cogs in a wheel. Our lives matter and a society that does not care for its people is in deep trouble. Let us use our vast resources to see that everyone lives well.

MLB. Metro takes a look at the best value cities to catch a major league game this summer.

The best bang for your buck this summer is taking a trip to Dodger Stadium. / GETTY IMAGES

With baseball season underway, and the weather getting warmer, now is the time to start thinking about summer vacations, and what better way to spend a summer vacation than taking a road trip to see your hometown baseball team play a road game.

Hotels.com, along with SeatGeek, did some analysis to find the best cities to catch a game this summer. Their formula was based off a number of criteria, including ticket availability and value, as well as the actual city destination with value and availability of hotels taken into account.

"A growing trend is when travelers use sports to fuel vacation plans," said Taylor L. Cole, a travel expert at Hotels.com. "Whether that means visiting a historic sports landmark with your family, attending a championship game or simply watching your favorite team play on the road, sports travel has become hugely popular. But beyond cheering on their favorite team, travelers shouldn't forget to explore all the great sites and gems these sports cities have to offer.

"Using 2015 ticket data from SeatGeek and insights from the Hotels.com Hotel Price Index, we analyzed how each baseball team ranked in the categories of average ticket price, ticket popularity, destination popularity and average hotel price," Cole added. "We then assigned a weighted value to each team within each category to come up with a total composite score to determine the best cities."

The formula concluded that the two top road cities in the league are Los Angeles and Atlanta.

"L.A. has a lot more to offer than its Hollywood attractions and proximity to sunny beaches," said Cole. "Downtown L.A.'s music scene, with historic venues and vintage record shops, has been a driving force of the area's revival. [It's] also home to some of the most innovative and talked-about cuisine in the country."

The Dodgers also feature some of biggest stars in the game in Clayton Kershaw and Yasiel Puig.

When it comes to seeing the Braves, the Red Sox will be in Atlanta on June 17-18.

"Atlanta is rich with history with notable parks and museums," Cole said. "It's also been the filming location for a number of movies and TV shows, which has given way to popular tours for fans. And 'Hotlanta' has a great culinary scene that was recently recognized among the country's best by Thrillist and Time."

Closing out the top five in the formula were Washington, Detroit and Denver (Colorado Rockies). The Yankees finished tied for 16th and the Red Sox tied for 22nd. These cities were so high because of their pricey tickets, as well as their expensive hotels.

NHL. Dobro Lucic, father of Milan, passes away

The father of Bruins forward Milan Lucic died unexpectedly last week.

"My family and I am very grateful for the outpouring of support from the hockey community, friends and fans from around the world," Lucic said in a team released statement.

Dobro Lucic had been a longshoreman in Vancouver.

Protesters show up to Sox game

During Saturday's Red Sox-Orioles game, an announcement was made to the crowd inside Camden Yards, urging fans to remain in the ballpark because of "an ongoing public safety issue." Thousands of protesters lined the streets in support of Freddie Gray, who died earlier this month after suffering a spine injury while in police custody. METRO

MLB. Wainwright may be done for the rest of 2015

St. Louis Cardinals hurler Adam Wainwright will likely miss the remainder of the 2015 season due to an Achilles injury he suffered while tripping out of the batter's box Saturday.

"My foot just shut down on me," Wainwright told ESPN.

Red Sox cooling off

The Red Sox aren't nearly as hot as they were two weeks ago. In fact, they might be slumping. The Sox sit at just 10-9 on the season and have lost two straight, the most recent defeat coming to the Orioles in the form of an 18-7 whacking. Sox starter Wade Miley lasted just 2.1 innings Sunday in Baltimore, allowing six earned runs. The Sox must rebound quickly as they begin a nine-game homestand Monday, starting with the Blue Jays. Joe Kelly will look to stop the Sox' bleeding tonight at Fenway (6:10 p.m., NESN).

NBA

Smart sorry for being late

It wasn't exactly Rajon Rondo sitting in a car just prior to the tip of an NBA playoff game, but Marcus Smart apologized to his teammates and head coach Brad Stevens on Sunday for being 15 minutes late to that morning's shootaround. Smart said he went to sleep at a decent hour Saturday night but that his alarm never went off.

"Coach is just doing what he has to do," Smart told ESPN. "It's not acceptable, especially when you've got everybody here. I think coach just made the right decision and it was my fault. I'll take the consequences of it." Jae Crowder started in place of Smart on Sunday, but Stevens said it was unrelated to the incident. Smart had a strong rookie year, averaging 7.8 points and 3.1 assists per game. MATT BURKE

Celts get under skin of Cavs, but bow out

NBA. The Cavaliers completed a sweep of a feisty, young Celtics team Sunday.

The 2014-15 Celtics overachieved, there's little doubt about that. But getting swept by any team, including one led by the best player on Earth, stings. The Celtics saw their season come to a harsh end Sunday at TD Garden, as they fell, 101-93, to the powerhouse Cavaliers.

The C's had their moments against the Cavs in the series, but LeBron James proved to be far too much for Boston to handle. James had a game-high 27 points Sunday in the close-out affair. Boston went against the early series grain in Game 4, this time falling behind early but having a superb third quarter that got them back in the contest. The Celts outscored the Cavs, 25-13, in the third to cut the lead to nine and make things interesting. But Cleveland never allowed the C's to get too close in the fourth as the two teams went back-and-forth.

The Cavs were victorious despite not having Kevin Love for the majority of Sunday's game. Love was injured just seven minutes into the contest after getting tangled with Kelly Olynyk. Olynyk and Love's arms were intertwined, causing Love's left shoulder to become dislocated. Love raced to the locker room after the play.

"I thought it was a bush-league play," Love said about Olynyk's "arm bar." I have no doubt in my mind that he did it on purpose. That's just not a basketball play. The league will take a look at it and it better be swift and just."

It is not yet known how much time Love will miss with the injury, but with the Cavs currently the odds-on favorite to win the Eastern Conference, it could certainly wind up to be one of the more significant moments of this NBA postseason.

In a chippy game, J.R. Smith was ejected for backhanding Jae Crowder, and old friend Kendrick Perkins set a wicked pick on Crowder.

The Celtics will now focus their attention on the NBA draft. The C's will have four picks to play with on June 25.
